Summary: Titanic

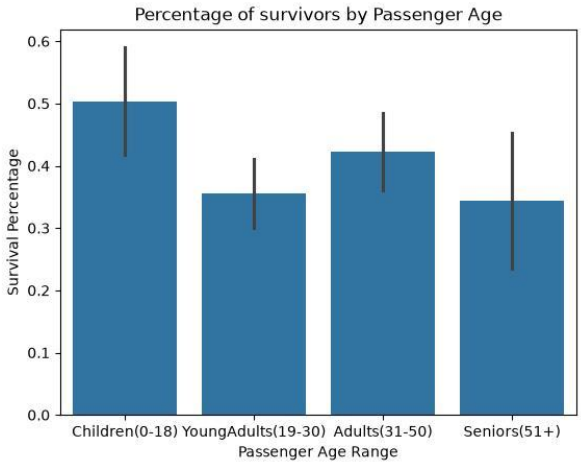

Salvador Priego Rosales ID:100460147

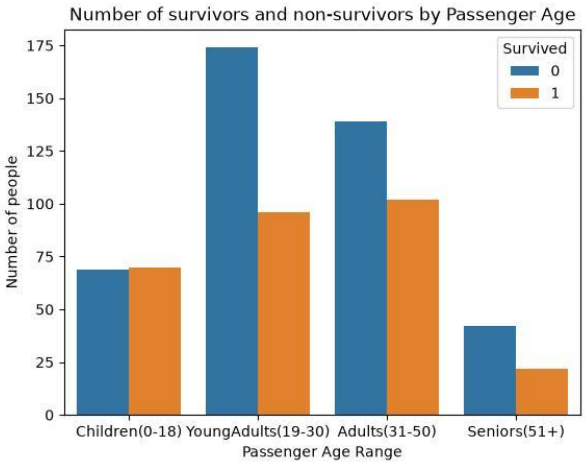

Conclusions

According to the data collected, the category most strongly associated with survival is sex: being female significantly increased one's chances of survival compared to being male. Next is the category of class; belonging to the first class improved one's odds of survival. Finally, there is age: being a minor slightly increased the likelihood of surviving. Thus, the one passenger most likely to survive was a female minor in first class.